

Independent Report on Priest Sex Abuse Cases for the Diocese of Burlington, VT. (1950 to 2019)

Child sexual abuse is a crime and a sin in the Catholic Church.

Bishop Christopher J. Coyne, who took over the Diocese of Burlington in January 2015, decided in October 2018 to join many other Dioceses across the nation to release the names of priests that had credible allegations of sexual abuse filed against them by victims who were under the age of 18 at the time of the incident.

Bishop Coyne announced he would appoint an independent citizen panel to comb through the diocesan personnel files to compile a list of priests with credible allegations against them. It should be noted this Committee is separate and apart from a State Task Force created in September 2018 by prosecutors, police and politicians.

Each individual responded affirmatively when asked to serve on this Review Committee. We are parents, spouses and siblings - some working, some retired. From the start, we each appreciated the gravity of the task before us. All team members brought their own gifts and perspectives, and each became an invaluable resource for the integrated group. We brought together our shared intellect, insight and empathy.

The importance of the organizational and note-taking skills of many in the group were critical to the process. The volume of the files we were presented with was itself a challenge. Files were made available to the team in digital and paper form. Honest discussions always were motivated by fairness - fairness to victims and their families and fairness to those accused. In reading these accounts of what happened to young people during critically formative years, we have been witness to how lives were changed in the moment.

What is particularly painful is knowing how lives were changed irreparably by what happened to the victims when they were young. For some there might have been the opportunity for healing, but for many there may have been a series of life choices intended to cover scars that only resulted in more pain and disappointment. Lives have been lost because of the abuse that occurred.

Victims have become our neighbors and yours. Some are business owners, teachers, politicians and inmates.

Many abusers and their victims are deceased, so some might ask “Why engage in this process?”

Publication of a list may cause harm to the legacy of accused perpetrators, but the list also may offer some long-missed consolation to victims and their families and friends. It is just one small step that might offer healing.

Many victims have never said anything publicly but have lived their lives quietly nagged by deep pain. They worked mightily to ensure their trauma did not define them. Some may have been more successful than others. Publication of names of the accused says to those quiet victims you are no longer alone -- we recognize your pain.

We are aware that across the nation the publishing of lists by dioceses or religious groups has been imperfect in some instances.

The Review Committee asked itself and the Diocese of Burlington frequently: “How do we know we have all the pertinent records?” If it proves to be imperfect here, it will not be because of our efforts. We have made our best agreed upon judgments based on the materials presented to us.

Unfortunately, the Vermont Roman Catholic Diocese, like many dioceses across the nation, and other religions and clubs, allowed the abuse of children by priests to go on unreported for several decades. In some instances, priests were transferred to other parishes, while others were sent for treatment before returning to duty or removed from duty.

Each diocese used its own standard for their reviews. We considered several and agreed to adopt the standard used by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Syracuse, NY to guide our decisions on finding a priest credibly accused of sexual abuse of minors. We believed it was the most fair to both victims and the accused.

We agreed “credible” is defined as: An allegation, based on facts of the case, that meets one or more of the following thresholds:

- a Natural, plausible and probable;
- b Corroborated with other evidence or another source, or
- c Acknowledged/admitted to by the accused

We determined there must be at least – a “fair probability” – based on the information we were given access to, that a particular priest had either sexually abused a child under the age 18 or created a “substantial risk” that the child would be sexually abused.

For the purposes of the Vermont report, a “credible allegation” is not the equivalent to a finding of “probable cause” by a judge or grand jury in a criminal case.

The Independent Review Committee agreed to consider complaints from the year 1950 to the current day -- as similarly adopted by other dioceses across the country. We were told there have been approximately 419 priests who have been assigned in the Diocese of Burlington during the years of 1950 to the present.

We began with 52 personnel files that the Diocese of Burlington said it had identified as having some kind of claim made against a specific priest. As we proceeded, more files were identified.

The file sizes ranged considerably as they included everything from academic records, to requests for vacations, parish assignments, correspondence between the priest and the Bishop of the time, as well as any documentation associated with an allegation. Some were 1,000 pages or more. Many of the allegations received went beyond the diocesan personnel records. It quickly became clear that our original target date to release the report of December 31, 2018 was unreasonable.

While the Review Committee has no law enforcement powers (compel statements, call a grand jury, issue subpoenas etc.) we did try to cross check the information we were reviewing. The Review Committee agreed it would not do interviews with victims or with witnesses. Those were seen as outside our scope.

We also reviewed files and complaints concerning priests that were assigned at the former St. Joseph Orphanage in Burlington, which has been the subject of media reports for child abuse by priests, nuns and lay people.

The Review Committee found the records maintained for priests belonging to the Diocese of Burlington were more complete, while only partial records were available for other religious orders or communities (including Edmundites, Maryknoll, Paraclete etc.) that served in Vermont parishes from time to time.

For our purposes, we developed two categories for those that will be listed. They are:

- A Priests that were assigned in Vermont and abused children here. This would include both those considered Diocesan priests and those from other Religious Orders (i.e. Edmundites, Maryknoll, Paraclete) that accepted assignment in the Diocese of Burlington.
- B Priests who have been found credibly accused in another jurisdiction and have direct or indirect connections to Vermont.

The review committee made a decision that its final public list would identify all priests we found that were credibly accused based on information or evidence we received. We agreed to include the following:

- Name
- Date and place of birth
- Date and place of ordination
- Dates of service
- Assignments
- Status as known to us (i.e. living, dead, removed from ministry etc.)

The final list reflects a finding by the committee of at least one credible allegation against each priest listed.

The committee made the decision not to identify:

- How many credible cases were filed against an individual priest;
- The location, date or any other information that might help pinpoint a minor victim.

We are aware there are other priests who are listed on the Bishop Accountability site \(http://www.bishop-accountability.org/\), who may have a connection to Vermont or have served in Vermont. Those out-of-state files we have not seen.

MOVING FORWARD

It was apparent the Vermont Diocesan record keeping system was inadequate and incomplete. It is recommended the diocese adopt a more formal tracking system which would result in a database of reported allegations of abuse against children. It would centralize relevant information such as names of victims, the date of the complaint, the accused, date and place of allegations, outcomes of investigations and other relevant information. Going forward it would be one way to know if the complaint had been filed earlier, investigated and/or resolved.

Today we are providing the names of 40 priests whom we believe have been credibly accused. Some faced criminal charges, others were sued in civil court. Some resolved abuse cases before any lawsuit. In other cases, the time to file criminal charges or civil lawsuits had expired. We were not bound by the Statute of Limitations in making our assessments.

The Review Committee also knows some victims did not come forward for whatever reason, including lack of faith in the Catholic Church or in the Vermont Criminal Justice System. It is our hope those victims may find strength now to speak.

Additional files are and will need to be reviewed as more allegations surface. Formalizing the reporting process and including independent citizen panels are steps toward ensuring these crimes are no longer hidden. We all need to protect our children.

We would urge victims to reach out to family members, a trusted friend, a teacher or guidance counselor, coach or to one of the following resources:
